DIY Marketing Starter Kit

Seven days to one clear offer and real conversations

Fillable on screen. Print-ready. No spam, no invented proof.

Edition 2 draft | We handle the execution.

Start here

A seven-day plan for a local service business

What you will do

Pick one service, describe the customer problem it solves, plan three posts, have a few permitted conversations, and record what actually happened. Seven short sessions of 20-40 minutes.

Your seven days

1. Day 1 One offer: say what you sell and to whom in one sentence
2. Day 2 Customer language: collect real questions and objections
3. Day 3 Proof you are allowed to use: photos, results, permissions
4. Day 4 Publish one post: teach, show or offer
5. Day 5 Conversations with people who asked or agreed to hear from you
6. Day 6 Follow up on requested estimates only
7. Day 7 Count real results and choose one change

What this kit does not do

It does not promise leads, rankings, sales, or income. Results depend on your service, area, price, timing and effort. Never invent reviews, expose a client or their home without permission, send bulk unsolicited messages, or advertise a service you cannot deliver right now.

My business

The one service I will promote

My start date

Day 1: one offer, one customer

Start narrow so a stranger understands you in one sentence

Worked example: a home-cleaning business. Replace every example with your own facts.

Service: standard home cleaning, up to 3 bedrooms. Who: busy households and landlords prepping a move-out. Area: the zip codes I can reach in under 30 minutes. Price: from a stated starting price, final quote after a scope check. Contact: the request form on my site.

Service or result I can actually deliver now

Who needs it and why

Service area and limits (zip codes or distance)

Starting price, or "quote after scope check"

Where a customer should contact me

Proof I may share (with permission only)

One-sentence offer: "I help ___ with ___ by ___."

Day 2: customer-language research

Write down what real people say. Do not guess demand

How to use this page

Use comments, direct questions, past customer messages, and public local discussions you are allowed to read. Copy the words people use, not your own summary. Skip anything private or posted in a group whose rules forbid it.

Where I heard it	What the customer said	Need or objection	Permitted next step
Example: question on my page	Do you bring your own supplies?	Wants to know what is included	Answer in a post

The three phrases I keep seeing

Day 3: proof you are allowed to use

Honest, permitted, specific

Before any photo, testimonial or result goes public

- [ ] I took the photo myself or hold a license to use it
- [ ] The customer agreed in writing (text or email counts) to this exact use
- [ ] No faces, addresses, plates, documents or children appear
- [ ] The caption describes only what the photo shows (one room is not "the whole house")
- [ ] I removed or blurred anything private
- [ ] I can show the date and scope if asked

Proof item	Source	Permission on file? (Y/N)	Where I may use it

If you have no proof yet

Use a clearly labeled example of your process, such as a checklist or a before-you-start list you made yourself. Do not stage a scene and present it as a customer result.

Day 4: the three-post plan

Rotate teaching, showing and offering

Post	Opening line	Main point or proof	One call to action
Teach	Example: The easiest first step before a deep clean…		Ask a question
Show	Example: Here is what a finished kitchen visit includes…		Request a quote
Offer	Example: I have openings for this service…		Contact me

Post checklist

One idea per post. One action. The service and price match your offer on Day 1. The photo is yours or licensed. You can fulfill what the post invites people to ask for.

My first post, written out

Caption starters you can finish

Three structures. Fill the lines, then read it out loud

Helpful tip

Hook: name the problem in the reader's words. Tip: one safe, practical step. Invitation: how to ask for help with the service you actually sell.

Behind the scenes

Show the process, not a promise. Name what the visit includes, what it does not, and how you check the result.

Examples only. Every claim must be true for your business

Teach

Three easy-to-miss spots in a quick clean: door handles, light switches and the area around the sink. Start with what your household touches most, and follow each surface maker's cleaning directions. What do you forget most often?

Show (scope stated)

One space, one change. This is the hall closet after an organizing session: two shelves, one bin per category, labels the client chose. Every space is different; this shows a method, not a guaranteed result. Want help with a similar space? Ask about availability.

Offer

I help busy households with standard home cleaning in my service area. Starting prices are on my request page, and I confirm scope before I quote. Message me for the next open dates.

Check before posting

Replace every example detail with real ones. Remove any claim you cannot prove. Add the price or quote path. Read platform and group rules first.

01. The touchpoint checklist (Teaching, Cleaning)

A quick-looking room isn't always a complete reset. Check these three easy-to-miss touchpoints: handles, switches, and the area around the sink. Start with the surfaces your household uses most, and always follow the surface manufacturer's cleaning directions. SAVE this checklist for your next cleaning day. What spot do you forget most often?

Adapt this for my business (one change I will make)

02. Organize for the real habit (Teaching, Organizing)

Before buying another bin, choose one spot and watch what actually happens there. Where do items land? Where are they used? Where do they get put back? Move the storage location closer to the habit, then label it simply. Start with one drawer or shelf. Which spot in your home needs a better system?

Adapt this for my business (one change I will make)

03. One safe household handoff (Teaching, Estate / household support)

The best household handoff isn't the longest one. Start with four fields: priority, approved task, status, and next owner. Keep keys, access codes, family schedules and private contact details in a protected system—not on a public board. Small routines make shared responsibilities easier. SAVE this four-field format.

Adapt this for my business (one change I will make)

Page 2 of 7. Fill every numbered gap with true facts (teaching)

04. The four inbox decisions (Teaching, Virtual assistance)

An inbox gets lighter when each message receives a decision: reply, schedule, delegate or archive. For messages that need later attention, add one dated next action to your approved tracker. Never export sensitive client data into an unsecured sheet. Try it on ten messages today and tell us which decision saved you time.

Adapt this for my business (one change I will make)

05. One offer, one action (Teaching, Cross-industry)

If your service post asks people to do five different things, try simplifying it. Name one customer problem, one deliverable and one next step. EXAMPLE: 'Need help getting your guest room ready? Ask about our scoped setup service. Message GUEST for availability.' Replace the example with what you truly offer and can deliver. Which service will you focus on this week?

Adapt this for my business (one change I will make)

06. Before-and-after with scope (Proof, Cleaning)

BEFORE / AFTER: (1) Scope: (2). Work completed: (3). Time spent: (4). We show results with matching angles and truthful descriptions—never an entire-home claim for a single counter. Want help with a similar space? (5).

What goes in the numbered gap	My answer
(1) Add your own permission-cleared photos of the same area
(2) Specific approved room or surface
(3) Actual tasks
(4) Actual duration or omit
(5) Approved booking link

07. A one-shelf reset (Proof, Organizing)

ONE SPACE, ONE CHANGE. (1) The goal was (2). We changed (3), and the household chose (4). Every space is different; this shows the method, not a guaranteed outcome. Ask about (5).

What goes in the numbered gap	My answer
(1) Add a real, approved photo pair or label this as a staged example
(2) Customer-approved organizing objective
(3) Actual shelf/drawer system
(4) Approved decisions
(5) Approved service or quote link

Caption library 8–9

08. Show the workflow, not the client data (Proof, Virtual assistance)

Here is how a small admin task can move from request to completion. (1) Step 1: record the task. Step 2: assign an owner. Step 3: confirm the next action. Step 4: mark the result. This is a process demonstration, not a client testimonial. Need a scoped admin workflow? (2).

What goes in the numbered gap	My answer
(1) Share a demo board using invented entries
(2) Contact link

09. The weekly handoff example (Proof, Estate / household support)

A clearer handoff can start with a single page. (1) What it includes: approved priorities, completed tasks and what still needs confirmation. What it leaves out: children, keys, private schedules and contact details. This demonstrates our documentation approach. (2).

What goes in the numbered gap	My answer
(1) Show an entirely invented example or a permission-cleared, redacted one
(2) Service inquiry link

Caption library 10–11

10. A real workday snapshot (Proof, Cross-industry)

TODAY'S SCOPE: (1). START: (2). ACTION: (3). HANDOFF: (4). Add only photos you created or are authorized to share; do not invent customer feedback, savings or transformations. This is what clear, documented service work looks like. (5).

What goes in the numbered gap	My answer
(1) Actual approved assignment
(2) What was ready
(3) Three specific steps performed
(4) What was completed or referred
(5) Approved booking link

11. A clear cleaning inquiry (Offer, Cleaning)

Need help with (1) in (2)? Our (3) covers (4) starting at (5). (6) To check availability, send (7) with your area, room count and top priority. (8).

What goes in the numbered gap	My answer
(1) Approved cleaning task
(2) Service area
(3) Specific service name
(4) Accurate included scope
(5) Approved rate or 'custom quote'
(6) List one important exclusion or scope boundary
(7) Preferred contact method
(8) Direct booking link

Caption library 12–13

12. Start with one area (Offer, Organizing)

One pantry or closet can be enough for a first organizing session. (1) offers (2) in (3). We begin by confirming the space, goal and expected hours; belongings are never discarded without your approval. Pricing: (4). Send 'ORGANIZE' through (5) to ask about availability.

What goes in the numbered gap	My answer
(1) Business name
(2) Approved organizing service
(3) Service area
(4) Approved hourly rate or quote path
(5) Contact link

13. Remove one repeated admin task (Offer, Virtual assistance)

Spending too much time on (1)? (2) offers (3) for (4). We confirm the task, access permissions, turnaround and price before starting. We do not promise guaranteed sales or handle sensitive credentials outside approved systems. Ask about (5): (6).

What goes in the numbered gap	My answer
(1) Specific recurring admin task
(2) Business name
(3) Approved service
(4) Clearly defined deliverable
(5) Service name
(6) Working inquiry link

Caption library 14–15

14. Set up a household workflow (Offer, Estate / household support)

Need a more reliable rhythm for (1)? (2) can discuss (3), (4) and the responsibilities involved. We'll define what is included, what needs your approval and whether a qualified outside provider is required. Request scope and availability here: (5).

What goes in the numbered gap	My answer
(1) Approved household activity
(2) Business name
(3) Specific approved service
(4) Service area
(5) Working booking link

15. One-week focus offer (Offer, Cross-industry)

THIS WEEK'S SERVICE SPOTLIGHT: (1). FOR: (2). INCLUDES: (3). DOES NOT INCLUDE: (4). PRICE: (5). SERVICE AREA / REMOTE: (6). NEXT STEP: (7). Only post after confirming availability and the exact offer terms.

What goes in the numbered gap	My answer
(1) Approved offer name
(2) Specific type of customer
(3) Three accurate deliverables
(4) Important exclusion
(5) Approved amount or quote path
(6) Verified coverage
(7) Working inquiry link

Day 5: conversations, not spam

Message only people who asked, or who agreed to hear from you

Reply to a question

Thanks for asking. Yes, I do this work in my service area, and I can send the list of what a visit includes. Would you like the details, or an estimate for your space? (Add your own service, area and inclusions below, in your own voice.)

My version of this reply

Safety rules

Honor opt-outs right away. Follow the rules of each platform and local communication laws. Do not scrape contacts, buy lists, or enroll anyone automatically.

Before I send any message

- [ ] The person asked, or agreed to hear from me
- [ ] I used their name and their words, not a template blast
- [ ] I gave one clear next step
- [ ] They can say "no thanks" and I will stop

Day 6: follow-up scripts

Only for estimates people requested

Requested estimate follow-up

Following up on the estimate you asked for. Is there anything you would like clarified? No pressure. I can close this out if the timing is not right.

Past customer (only with their permission to contact them)

Hope the last visit is still working well. If you would like to book again, the request link is on my page. Reply here if you have questions first.

If they say no or stop

Thank you for letting me know. I will not message again. (Then mark them as opted out in your log.)

Day 7: scorecard

Use actual results to decide what to change

Posts published (count and where)

Consented inquiries received

Qualified conversations

Quotes sent or valid checkout attempts

Paid orders (not tests, not $0)

Money actually collected

Simple rates (do by hand)

Inquiries per post = inquiries / posts. Quote rate = quotes / inquiries. Close rate = paid orders / quotes. Average order = money collected / paid orders. A small number of results is a signal to test again, not proof.

A reminder on honesty

Trust is your marketing. Keep claims specific, true and easy to verify.
